UP ON THE ROOF Stucco leaks

I am writing about this subject again because I have been to so many homes in the Lutz area that still have not addressed this issue, and I even had to do the same at my own home as I had 14 areas to fix (check below windows first).

I was recently in the neighborhood and showed the owner at least 10 long cracks in his stucco that needed to be sealed before the next tropical storm. PLEASE read this, as the preventative measure is easy and can really save you later! MAKE SURE you seal these cracks with an elastomeric caulk, NOT stucco patch. You need something flexible in this area as it will continue to move slightly over time. You can look this up on Google to learn more.

My name is West Edwards, and I am a resident in Lutz, and the owner of Sharpe Roofing. I have been in the roofing industry for 20+ years and have been on over 10,000+ roofs on commercial and residential properties in that time. It is my goal to help educate the community regarding things I have learned along the way that can hopefully help you extend the life of your current roof & plan well for your next one.

Did you know that any stucco wall above your lower roof system, or even on the first floor, can be the cause of what may appear to be a roof leak in your home? While we make many repairs due to a prior workmanship error, the relationship to leaking is not always the roof when you see a stain in your ceiling or wall. Most homes in the area have a stucco coating on the exterior wall, and many have either raised entryways, dormers, or second story walls that are above a lower roof system. Over the past 20 years we have seen many leaks where the wall above ties into the roof system below for an asphalt shingle, tile or metal roof system.

Stucco and mortar are very porous and need to be sealed well to prevent water intrusion. When it comes to some of our long soaking rains that blow against our walls (mostly in tropical storms for over 3 hours), the only thing keeping the water on the outside is the quality and condition of the paint job on the home. The typical acrylic base paints we have used for many years now have a steady rate of decline (like asphalt shingles and our roads) due to solar degradation, and especially on the South and West facing walls. Once the paint has become thin enough, or has cracks or pinholes in it, it can no longer provide the watertight integrity we need to protect our homes. When a wall is above the roofline, and the water gets into the stucco this way, it will leak behind the wall flashing and make it appear as though it is a roof leak. Use this video link to see an explanation on our Roofing University YouTube page <https://youtu.be/pRo0aIW0RaI> and also about wall flashing details <https://youtu.be/c6li2pOCE7c>

Once the water is behind the stucco it will typically also cause the wire mesh behind the stucco to rust and expand, which in turn causes the stucco to crack and leak even more! It is particularly important to hire a painting contractor who is knowledgeable about this and understands how their work above the roofline is protecting you from our frequent and heavy rains over the years. It is also important that you walk around your home to look for cracks in the stucco that will allow water intrusion, as it can eat away at your home in an area you can't see until it is too late!

I hope you find this information useful and helpful to share with friends, family and co-workers who may be in the process of buying or selling, or even considering a roof system replacement. Also, please know I am always willing to help by simply discussing any concerns you may have about your home. Stay safe out there!
